THE BLUTHEN HAVE ONE CONSUMING PASSION: THEMSELVES. IN THEIR EXPANSION ACROSS THE GALAXY, THEY WILL GO TO ANY LENGTHS TO DOMINATE SPECIES THEY ENCOUNTER. Torn from modern day Earth and stranded on the far side of the Galaxy, Sandra Fairbairn must use every particle of courage she possesses to adjust to her new life and live for tomorrow. Eugen Mhartak, a general in the Tri-Race Alliance Army, refuses to bow to the merciless Bluthen. Haunted by the loss of far too many innocent lives he has vowed to drive the ruthless invaders from Alliance space. The strength and valor of Eugen Mhartak attracts Sandra as no man ever has, but she struggles to read the enigmatic general's heart. Determined to help him triumph over the Bluthen she uncovers a diabolical plot against the Alliance. Drawn by the courage and exotic beauty of Sandra, Mhartak battles to overcome the barriers of cross-cultural differences that separate them and claim her ardent interest. He must conquer his deepest fears to be the man she needs. When his principles are betrayed by his own government and he is faced with the impossible prospect of taking Sandra's life in order to save his home planet, Mhartak desperately searches for a way to keep safe both his world and the magnificent woman who has stolen his heart.

Unique world, a touch of romance and lots of action

By A Book a Day

For a first book, I have to say overall I'm impressed. The author built a unique and intriguing world filled with loveable characters waging a bitter alien race war. It ended up being a much more serious book than I had anticipated and although there is sex, it's not the hot smutty alien sex one might think. In fact, the only thing I found a bit frustrating between the world building, character development, interpersonal relationships, and alliances, was the actual romance. This book encompassed a lack of communication that encompassed almost the entire book and I was screaming in my head, talk, people, talk!

Sandra is kidnapped from earth by a brutal alien race who's picking off species from all over the universe to perform torturous tests on. It's not quite clear what they're looking for in the beginning, but their experiments all seem to end in failure. With little memory of how, Sandra manages to escape and comes across a race of beings who are also captured and tortured. She manages to rescue them and they rescue her right back by taking her with them. When they realize earth is too far away to return her to her home, they hope she'll be able to adjust to her new life, especially one general in particular, who cannot keep her off his mind. It's a hard adjustment for Sandra recovering from torture, isolation and loss, as well as landing in the middle of interplanetary war, but as she goes through the motions and helps in the effort, it may be that the experiments on her didn't fail after all.

The great thing about this story is that there is an actual story and it's not just a lead to sex. This is not your sit and relax beach read. It's actually quite complicated with all the races, politics, games and battle scenes that take place. The characters are slowly developed and wonderful that you can't help but build attachments to them. As I mentioned earlier, the only thing that dragged this book down was the over the top miscommunication. It's clear there is attraction at first sight, but instead of addressing it, there's quite a bit of what if he/she doesn't want me that went on for over 100 pages. Even when it's clear they want each other, the author managed to bog it down with another 200 pages of insecurity. Overall, it's a great first book and there's plenty of room for sequels with great characters. I for one would enjoy reading future installments, sans the dreaded miscommunication, and look forward to what comes next.

Needs to be heavily edited. Cover is deceptive.

By C. Paul

So weirdly, the "it's okay" rating is 3 stars here, as opposed to the 2 stars over on Goodreads. I'm just gonna cut and paste what I put over there:

First of all, this is a classic example of 'never judge a book by its cover.' The creatures described in the story are absolutely nothing like this random dude on the cover. If I were the author, I'd be pissed.

Secondly, this story needs some editing. It's riddled with repetitive wording, misspellings, and composition errors. You'd think the editors at the publisher would have, you know - done their jobs. In fact, the mistakes were so apparent that I was surprised to discover the book wasn't self-published. I checked out the publisher's website and couldn't help but roll my eyes a bit:

"Soul Mate Publishing welcomes you to romance, where two become one. We offer high-quality romantic fiction for readers around the world. Our novels, written by only the finest authors, will be available both electronically and in paperback. Whether you enjoy traditional romance or are searching for stories that push the limits, you'll find what you're looking for. We are NOT the same old thing!"

The redundancy issues in this story are staggering. There are 24 -- TWENTY FOUR -- instances of the word "speared" throughout the story. He SPEARED her a look. She SPEARED her gaze. Her eager fingers SPEARED over his collarbones. The quick glance he SPEARED. The thesaurus is a wonderful tool, it really is. There was so much spearing going on, I felt like spearing my tablet. Though on occasion, "speared" was substituted with "sheared" or "arrowed." At one point we even get "spear" and "arrow" in the same sentence!

"Erotic shiver" was used multiple times as well. In fact, by the 15th time the word "erotic" was used, I was thoroughly annoyed. Yes, we know it's erotic. It's a romance. Erotic actions/reactions don't actually need to be described as erotic.

Eugen's (the main sex/love interest) voice is described as "chocolate" multiple times, and every time I read that, I immediately thought of the Chocolate Rain guy. If you're not familiar with him, then you NEED to watch this: <http://youtu.be/EwTZ2xpQwpA>

There was a lot of running around in the woods. And then some action happens. And then some more running around in the woods. And then getting trapped in a cave (locked cell door). Then running. And action stuff. Then getting trapped in a cave...again (Eugen manacled to the wall). Then more running through the woods. It was a little bit exhausting, and I wasn't even the one running around.

Also, the main character's background is rather fuzzy. Some more info on experience and education would have been nice. Pretty much all we really get is that she knows her way around a rifle because of time spent on her uncle's cattle ranch. It's mentioned at times that she's an "amateur" astronomer, that she's only taken a semester or so of it, but she can quote exactly what Lagrangian points are in a textbook-recitation sort of way. It was bizarre when she threw around `expert' terminology without having a clear picture what her profession/background was.

All that said, I did enjoy the story itself. There were some fun concepts. The author was a bit overwhelming at times with the strings of adjectives or the awkward sentence structures, but what I really liked was the world-building. Specifically the peeks into the alien culture (ex: the goundash/cube games), the little caped lizard, and the dog-like laraxdon. I also enjoyed the way the author visualized the events going on inside Sandra's head during her `jacking in' to the Bluthen ship.

Oh yeah, and Eugen's giant wang.

Phenomenal first book!

By A.Stewart

For a first book this was off the charts. If you are in to sci-fi romance then this is the book that should be read above all others. The writing style is perfection; storyline, composition, and character development are well executed and at the perfect pace.

I hope that there will be more by this author, and in particular make 'Alien Mine' the first of a possible series. The secondary characters were just as enjoyable as the primary, and as such I hope that they too get a book of their own.

Many, many kudos to this wonderful new author.
